

Amanda Persona

You will take on the role of Amanda. An interviewer will be asking questions of you about a social engagement application being developed by a university. You will answer questions based on the characteristics of your role as Amanda. Amanda is a member of the admissions department at the university. She evaluates student applications to the university and approves the majority of students for enrollment. She is concerned about student fraud in applications. In addition, she worries that not all students will not have the same experience based on demographics. This limitation will limit their engagement. She is 56 years old and has worked at the university in the admissions department for 35 years. She does not like technology, especially email and computer screens. She prefers to work with students face to face. Oddly, she is very comfortable texting and working with apps on her phone. Amanda wants a personal relationship with all of the students and wants them to be engaged in learning and experiencing all that college life has to offer them. She wants a way to figure out who is engaged with the university and who is not engaged and why they are not engaged.

Original Script:

1. Walk me through how you use the dashboard in a normal week
2. What part of the tool is the most confusing or hard to use?
3. How would you want information presented differently, and what would that look like in practice?
4. How do you like to get help when something goes wrong, and why does that approach work best for you?
5. What parts of the platform work well for you, and why do they matter?

New Script:

1. Walk me through how you check in on your students in a normal week, whether that is through the dashboard, in person, or another way
2. What part of checking on student engagement feels the most confusing or hard to do, whether that is using the tool itself or something else in the process?
3. How would you want information about student engagement presented to you, and what would that look like in practice?
4. How do you like to get help when something goes wrong, and why does that approach work best for you?
5. What parts of how you currently track or learn about student engagement work well for you, and why do they matter?
6. Are there certain students or situations where you worry about the platform might miss something important, such as differences in how students experience college life?

Revised New Script:

1. Walk me through how you use the platform in a normal week
2. What part of the platform is confusing or hard to use?
3. How would you want student engagement information presented to you, and what would that look like in practice?
4. When something goes wrong with the platform, how do you prefer to get help, and why does that approach work best for you?
5. What parts of the platform work well for you, and why do they matter?
6. Is there anything you feel the platform does not currently show you that would help you understand a student's experience more fully?
